

What is Internet Radio?

There are literally thousands of radio stations broadcasting over the internet. There is a mixture of conventional radio stations that transmit locally via conventional terrestrial radio transmitters but are also now running a parallel transmission via the internet so now you can be listening to a radio station that is broadcasting in the UK or just about anywhere in the world. There are also many Internet radio stations that are broadcast only over the Internet and these usually specialise in very specific styles of music or information. This is particularly good for those of us with musical taste beyond your local Top 40 FM station; you now have an almost unlimited amount of music and information available to you, free on the Internet.

Why Denon Internet Radio?

Denon units with a built in Internet radio tuner do not need a computer to gain access to Internet radio stations, all you need is to have your Denon component connected to your home network with Internet access. Stations can be selected by either Genre or Region and you can store up to 56 Internet radio stations as a Favourite for instant recall
